

Delusion is a mental illness

To those of you who believe that random persons on Facebook or Twitter can be substituted as the sole source of your media information, this message is for you.

If everyone is a medical expert then no one is. If science, facts, and intelligence are not revered and respected, they are then diluted and diminished. If you are baffled by the correct articulation and pronunciation of polysyllabic words by the traditional new media, then this is your personal problem to resolve as a prerequisite to participation in our society.

If you continue to create and live in your own reality, you will be constantly challenged and confronted by the actuality of, and conflicts with, the real world around you. This artificial world however will ultimately leave you feeling hopeless, depressed and result for many in alcoholism, drug addiction, and suicide. The human mind is like a boomerang in that if you throw it too far, it may not come back.

I encourage those of you who continue to put our children and elders at risk for perhaps generations to come, to stop endangering them by cloaking yourselves and invisibly participating in our society. Start to abide by the rules of civilization, or accept the personal responsibility of seeking help. The dead of course have no liberty or freedoms.

For assistance visit:

<https://www.dhs.wisconsin.gov/mh/dcindex.htm>

<https://www.mentalhealth.gov/get-help>

“Those who can make you believe absurdities, can make you commit atrocities.” — Voltaire
(See Jan.6)